

Stochastic Latency

Richard Sowers

University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

(Dated: December 6, 2012)

Latency is a crucial issue in modern trading. We consider a simple model where latency is dynamically evolving, and correlated with volatility. Our goal is to see, in this model, the effect of these issues on volatility.

This is joint work (in progress) with Andrei Kirilenko of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.